Introduction

In Story

Here you will find photos and stories that the National Council for Curriculum and Assessment (NCCA) has gathered from schools. They show the Primary School Curriculum (1999) in action in schools across the country and celebrate the work of primary schools in bringing the curriculum to life over the ten years from 1999 to 2009.

In reviews of the curriculum during this time, teachers reported that children's enjoyment of learning was their greatest curriculum success. Fostering the happiness of childhood, a time of discovery and delight, is something of which we can and should be proud.

The NCCA and the Department of Education and Science can only create a curriculum on paper. Teachers and children bring it to life. Ten years on, what better way of paying tribute to the work of schools than by publicly celebrating, sharing and learning from it?

The NCCA thanks the Education Centre Network for their support in this project.
